[REDACTED] is a good person who seems to be struggling with some things in his personal life. He missed a few classes last week for what he said was some "personal stuff." And he has been late to the last few classes. I've had [REDACTED] in class before and really enjoyed his contributions to class. It is the same thing this semester, but he seems to be a little off. I've talked with him a little after class and just sent him an email. I would appreciate someone else reaching out to him to make sure he's doing ok.

Hi, Andrew. I was able to reach [REDACTED]. It sounds like he is having some family and relationship challenges. He did say that he was thankful you had someone check on him. We discussed the counseling center and he is open to seeing them, but I also offered to be a (non-counseling) listening ear that could make him a cup of hot tea or coffee. Please let me know if I can do anything else to help.

Student has recently been diagnosed with mental health challenges. She has had adjustments with medicine and was working two jobs and is having a hard time managing everything. I have encouraged her to reach out to the professor to see what next steps are, and depending on those steps to connect with her advisor and financial aid. She plans to reach out to the professor and call me back with a time for us to meet about time management and organization.
The student gave the following reasons/referrals for the issue:
Reasons: Medical, Personal/Family, Time Management
Referrals: Advisor, Professor, Student Success Center

Alert type: The system made me pick one HOWEVER none of these are accurate. [REDACTED] has gppd attendance, assignments are ok, and turned in. She has other risk factors for not doing well. [REDACTED] has attended classes and is doing well on assignments thus far. She has communicated she is working on her mental health and is worried about her success as a student on campus. She has been connected with campus counseling center and I will be supporting her and keeping an eye on her (professor and advisor). I have had good luck with EAS as a resource for other students and was hoping EAS may be able to provide supports for her.

I called and had a great discussion with [REDACTED]. She shared that she has connected with the counseling clinic and went to the medical clinic for medication to assist with her mental health. She also agreed to come in and chat with me and we are meeting on Friday. If there is anything else I can help with Jennifer, please let me know.

The student gave the following reasons/referrals for the issue:
Reasons: Mental Health Concerns
